FROM THE PASTOR

Our First Reading today depicts the Ten Commandments. Some have said we don't hear about the ten commandments anymore. The Ten Commandments are not a way to get to heaven. They are not even the center of our faith. Instead, Jesus is both the way to heaven and the center of our faith. Nevertheless, the Ten Commandments are understood to be of great significance for us.

Being a Catholic Christian is a bit like getting married. When the vows are taken, promises are made. There is a shape to the married life. There are guidelines, which are absolutely essential if marriage is to succeed. Thus, when one marries a wife or a husband, there is a promise to forsake all others, a promise to be faithful to the spouse, and to do this until death do us part.

What is central to a marriage is one's spouse. The rules enable the relationship, but they can never replace it. Likewise being a Catholic Christian has to do with a personal relationship with God, a relationship which occurs when a person trusts Jesus. When this happens a new life begins, and this life has a concrete shape. This shape is congruent to a life which is shaped by obedience to the Ten Commandments.

The life shaped by Jesus Christ is also marked by love, repentance, hope. A life not shaped by this obedience cannot be a life where faith, hope and love are flourishing. To run afoul of the Ten Commandments is to live a life which is not centered on Jesus Christ. The Ten Commandments are like reflectors on a highway. They warn us of danger. They warn us when our life with God is headed in the wrong direction. They warn us when our life with God is moving toward danger.

The Ten Commandments touch on two relationships. They tell us of our relationship with God and with our neighbor. The Ten Commandments do not tell us how to love God or how to love our neighbor. They do warn us when we are moving in the opposite direction and away from love of God and neighbor. We are challenged to live out the Ten Commandments daily.

Fr. Steve

St. Gregory the Great Pastoral Council Third Townhall Event this Monday, March 4, 7-8:30 PM, GA Undercroft Topic: “Where Are We Going?” The Saint Gregory the Great Pastoral Council will hold a townhall meeting to discuss the Pastoral Plan that will be published in the bulletin on Sunday February 25th. Participants in small-group break-out sessions will have an opportunity to share their thoughts on ways to implement the Plan’s three goals. Members of the Pastoral Council will also take questions about the future direction of Saint Gregory the Great Family of Parishes.
